“Incentive trips usually have a standard procedure. This one was unique, in a special setting. I brought back small simple things; in the end they make all the difference.”

Roger Teihmann, CEO

The seashell

“I knew from the first minute they welcomed me at the airport and took me with a speed boat to our hotel that this was going to be an exclusive experience. Right outside my bungalow there was a stretch of private sandy beach. This is where I found the seashell.”

The ceramic bird

“A sailing race was organized to give us a real taste of the waves and the wind. Our skipper led our team to victory as we arrived at the car-free island of Hydra – just 38 nautical miles from Piraeus. I bought this little bird to remind me of the freedom I felt as we were out at sea.”

in Greek: “pípperies”

“Eating out in a foreign country can be ordinary. But our organizers had a very interesting idea to spice it up: going out to an outdoor market and buying ourselves the ingredients needed for our chef. Never thought my decrepit Greek could actually bring such tasty results!”

The cork

“I kept this cork from our private wine tasting in the middle of one of the finest vineyards in the Peloponnese. It is from a bottle of ‘Limnio’, a variety which comes back from Aristotle’s days with its name almost intact. Back then it was called ‘Limnia’.”

The antique earrings

“Instead of doing the standard city tour, our guide decided to take us to antique jewellery stores and learn the city’s history from stories told: from designs to myths or anywhere the moment led us – history, politics, economics...”

The gift

“At the award ceremony I was also offered this ancient replica owl, Athena’s symbol of wisdom. Yet this ancient city had a lot to show us about having a great time. After the gala we went out. Modern Athens by night. Great music, buzzing people, bars and style.”

The honey, memories that stick

“In the end it is all about the people. From the team that plans, organizes and reveals to us “Greece”, to the people who actually make up Greece. They share, they participate and they make it unforgettable.”
